The point of creativity is to encourage students to think differently than convention demands. They don't have to do things the way they've always been done. Instead, they can figure out a better way. Students don't have to embrace their creativity alone, either. In fact, creativity works best when combined with the next 21st Century

From my point of view, I think the most important skill in the 21st century workplace is communicating skills. If you work in a team or a group, you will have to communicate well to express your thoughts, your ideas to the others. Especially when you have a presentation, that's when the skill is most effectively used.
